Not only that, but they managed to increase the original size of the Recycle Bin by five times in order to have more space for the user's files. The simplest thing in the world that you could do to stop this, is to remove the Recycle Bin entirely. You can do this easily in Windows 7 by going to Settings > System > Recycle Bin and delete it from the list. By default, the Recycle Bin is visible by default, but you can disable that by choosing "Automatically empty on space availability". Another way is to simply delete the Recycle Bin folder. The Recycle Bin folder is located in the following path:
Windows 7 %AppData%\Local\Microsoft\Recycle Bin
Windows Vista %LocalAppData%\Microsoft\Recycle Bin
Because the Recycle Bin folder itself is hidden, you might be asking yourself why you would want to remove the folder, which will be impossible to access again. Well, here is the beauty of the Recycle Bin folder: You can restore files in it if you have enough space You can use it to completely remove the files without overwriting them It is simple to disable the Recycle Bin folder to make sure that it can't get in the
