Eppanerin in the treatment of headaches and rheumatic diseases. Eppanerin (Cefcapene) is a broad spectrum antibacterial drug with antimicrobial activity against various bacterial pathogens including anaerobes, gram-positive and gram-negative bacteria. It is also active against several groups of fungi and is a potent inhibitor of histamine. Headaches and arthralgias are common complaints in patients with rheumatic diseases. It has been shown that antibacterial agents, including antibacterial peptides, may effectively treat headaches and arthralgias. In this double-blind, randomized study, 55 patients suffering from tension-type headache and arthralgia were treated with 600 mg eppanerin (Cefcapene) per day in three divided doses. Symptoms were assessed on a weekly basis. Results showed that patients treated with eppanerin reported statistically significant improvements in all measured symptoms, in comparison with patients treated with placebo (p

The US government moved to shut down a legal challenge to Obamacare at the Supreme Court this week after justices heard arguments on the case. The case involves whether the legislation that signed the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act into law can be challenged at a higher level, such as a lower court, rather than the Supreme Court, if the law violates the Constitution. This is the second time that the Obama administration has successfully filed to shut down the case as it attempts to prevent the plaintiffs from prevailing on their claim that the law should be thrown out for not being constitutional. The justices gave no indication of when they plan to decide whether the entire law, including the individual mandate that requires all Americans to have health insurance or face a penalty, should be declared unconstitutional. The newest filing by the administration is at least the sixth time that the government has moved to shut down a case in the last seven months. Courts have not been given the authority to shut down cases, only to defer them. The Supreme Court ruling in 2012 on the Affordable Care Act's constitutionality put the Obama administration on the defensive from the start, when it forced a legal challenge to an individual mandate provision to be brought before the Supreme Court. Chief Justice John Roberts initially
