The aim of this study was to evaluate the dose-related ocular toxicity of isotretinoin in post-adolescence acne vulgaris patients. Eighteen patients (13 men and 5 women, mean age 20.1 +/- 2.9 years) who took isotretinoin for more than 2 months participated in the study. All patients had severe, nodulocystic acne vulgaris. All patients underwent slit-lamp examination, biomicroscopy of the anterior and posterior segments of the eye, and direct ophthalmoscopic examination. Before and after isotretinoin treatment, serum triglycerides, cholesterol, high density lipoprotein cholesterol, and total cholesterol/high density lipoprotein cholesterol ratio were measured in all patients. The mean pretreatment isotretinoin dose was 0.5 mg/kg per day. The mean isotretinoin dose used at the last examination was 0.8 mg/kg per day. Dose-dependent ocular toxicity was observed in 12 (66.7%) of 18 patients. There was a statistically significant correlation between the severity of ocular toxicity and the isotretinoin dose. An incidence of 33% ocular toxicity was detected with isotretinoin doses less than 0.4 mg/kg per day. An incidence of 71.4% ocular toxicity was detected with isotretinoin doses greater than or equal to 0.6 mg/kg per day. After the treatment, we found a significant decrease in the serum triglycerides, cholesterol, high density lipoprotein cholesterol, and total cholesterol/high density lipoprotein cholesterol ratio. We concluded that isotretinoin could induce dose-dependent ocular toxicity. The risk of ocular toxicity seems to be related to the dose. Ask HN: Reaching out to other business owners? - kjhughes While I'm sure there are plenty of people who would love to offer advice, there are countless other businesses out there that don't have a single contact and might not know someone who knows someone who is willing to offer a few hours of advice. I'm curious what sort of tools or methods folks use to keep in touch with the other businesses in their area, and if you have any suggestions on ways to go about reaching out to them. ===== wm
